Ireland is a country that is full of stories about spirits and magic. One of the stories is about a banshee, a woman spirit. According to Irish legend, the banshee cries before a member of one of the five major Irish families dies.

The banshee usually appears in a grey cloak and she may be young, middle-aged or old and ugly. Sometimes she is seen washing blood from the clothes of people who are going to die. Often people don't see her – they just hear her strange cry. Many people think that her loud cries are cats howling at night.

The banshee only appears at night when a member of one of the important families is going to die. There are times when people are warned of her arrival. They see horses without heads pulling a big, black coach.

So is the banshee real? There are many reasons not to believe in it. But if you ever hear the banshee cry, it can only possibly mean one thing:
 Someone is going to die!
